

Your Eye To Energize The Work Force

INTRODUCTION

Organizations with good management and governance monitor proactively. Yet, despite their efforts, some organizations fail to monitor effectively either because they are not watching on right time, right resource, the reporting is not accurate, or the right people are not receiving in-time/complete reports.

If each business unit only monitors what it believes is important, it is easy to lose sight of the impact its activities have on the organization as a whole.

Senior management explicitly asks how to monitor the factors that could impair progress toward their objectives. Several key questions need to ask when initiating monitoring:

- Are the organization's objectives clearly defined and measurable?
- For each objective, how does management report progress?
- Is management using the right tool?
- Is monitoring reported at the right level of detail and frequency?
- How accurate and timely is the reported information?
